

Lights in the Darkness Vigil

Putting a face on the tragedy

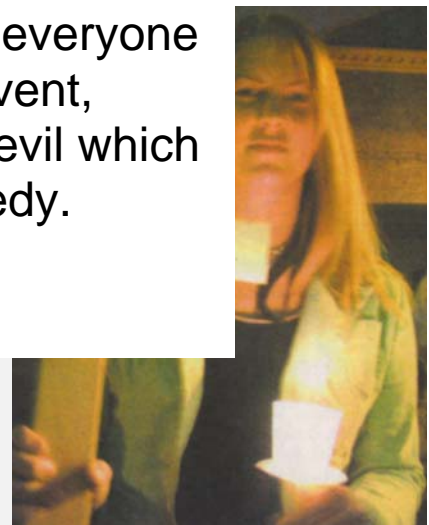

On Friday, March 24, the 8th Annual Drug Awareness Candlelight Vigil was held, to honor and remember individuals who have fallen to drug and alcohol addiction. The mood was somber. As in previous years, candles lit young and old faces, people who were holding photos of loved ones who are gone. See story on page 11. •

Above: a group of young people outside the church hold photos of friends. Left: Stephanie Davido, holds a cross for her mother, Arlene Davido; right, Kathleen Davido holds a cross for her uncle, John Davido.

/Photos: Carol Denker

On Friday, March 24th, the 8th Annual Drug Awareness Candlelight Vigil was held for individuals who have fallen to drugs and alcohol. Thanks to everyone who participates in this event, unfortunately it's a necessary evil which brings faces to this tragedy.

Stephanie Scully mourns the loss of her only sister, Maureen Scully, who died at the age of 21.

Ona McDermott carries a cross for her late fiancé, Keith Doyle

A family hit by drugs marches during the vigil.

Cousins carry the photos of their relatives Michael Hopkins Jr. and Donna Marie Hopkins during the candlelight vigil.

Photos of loved ones lost to the effects of drugs and alcohol line tables at the front of St. Anne's Church during the memorial service.